Council for Exceptional Children Partners with Indiana CASE for CEC 2019 Convention & Expo

CEC and ICASE will host thousands of special educators for the world's largest special education professional development event in Indianapolis.

Arlington, Va., April 11, 2018 – The Council for Exceptional Children (CEC) and the Indiana Council of Administrators of Special Education (ICASE) have partnered together to host the CEC 2019 Convention and Expo in Indianapolis. Through their individual missions, both organizations work to ensure that their members are supported and provided with the knowledge and resources they need to advance the success of children and youth with exceptionalities.

Partnering will allow CEC and ICASE to reach a broader audience making high-quality professional development more accessible to all educators. “The opportunity to work in collaboration with CEC to bring educational leaders that enhance the lives of students with exceptionalities to our great state of Indiana from around the world is truly exciting,” explains Mark Booth, ICASE president.

CEC 2019 will host 4,000 educators from around the globe, where they will gain insights and explore solutions to the most important and challenging topics facing special education today. During the event, attendees will have access to over 500 sessions and workshops highlighting the latest research and strategies in special education and the policy developments that affect teachers and their work every day. Presentations range from diversity and inclusion to universal design for learning, differentiated instruction, and positive behavioral practices.

All teachers and education professionals are invited to join the CEC community during its 97th Annual Convention and Expo in Indianapolis, Jan. 29–Feb. 2, 2019.
